

NAVAL OFFICER

LEADING OUR MISSION

Excel in a career unlike any other with the Republic of Singapore Navy. As a Naval Officer, you will play a vital role in leading our men and women in protecting Singapore's waters and ensuring continued access to our sea lanes. Your leadership skills will be put to the test as you take command of some of the most advanced warships, while playing an instrumental role in strengthening diplomatic ties with like-minded nations.

TAKE COMMAND

As a Naval Officer, you will be groomed to take command of our Navy's sophisticated submarines, warships and naval aircraft, while leading the men and women of our Navy family to fulfil their duty of defending Singapore.

With your acute strategic senses, you will use your diplomatic skills in extending a hand of friendship with like-minded navies during times of peace, and during troubled times, lead your people to victory at sea. Choose a career that serves a bigger purpose, and rewards you with an extraordinary and meaningful experience.

Embark on a purposeful career as a Naval Officer.

OUR PURPOSE

For centuries, maritime trade has been a key component of Singapore's economy and vital to its survival and prosperity. Given Singapore's strategic location, seaborne trade is the lifeblood of our economy and we rely on the sea to import valuable cargo and energy, and to export goods we manufacture. Our port is one of the busiest in the world and our offshore islands along the Singapore Strait host some of the world's largest oil refineries. Threats to Singapore's waters – the borders of a small island state measuring no more than 50km by 27km with no geographic depth – are also threats to the nation and Singaporeans' livelihoods. The sea is Singapore's lifeline, our link to the world and our first line of defence.

The 4 key roles of our Navy

Ensuring maritime security

The Singapore Strait is one of the busiest waterways in the world – every day, close to a thousand ships ply it. Given its proximity to the country's city centre and critical industries, it is crucial that the RSN ensures that maritime security is never compromised. The Navy maintains a 24/7 presence in Singapore waters, supported by surveillance and sense-making hubs ashore, and works closely with national and regional maritime agencies and navies to ensure that our seas are safe and secure for all.

Enhancing diplomacy

The RSN contributes to the expansion of Singapore's policy space by making friends and sustaining strong relationships with fellow navies in the region and beyond. Building relationships with friends and partners improves trust and interoperability and makes it easier to tackle maritime concerns and security challenges together.

Protecting our Sea Lines of Communication

Singapore sits astride the major sea lines of communication in the world. Cut off its access to them and Singapore will immediately be isolated. The RSN plays an important role in maintaining access to these sea lines of communication and deterring and dealing with threats to their closure.

Securing our peace

In peace, the RSN has to hone and finesse its warfighting capabilities. It has to be ready at all times to answer the call of duty, and work with friends and partners to protect the seas, which are global commons. Should deterrence and diplomacy fail, the RSN will secure a swift and decisive victory for Singapore against any aggressor at sea.

OUR ARSENAL OF ASSETS

Submarines, warships and naval aircraft are critical instruments of war, used to accomplish strategic, operational and tactical goals. Your training as a Naval Officer will prime you to command an array of state-of-the-art naval platforms and systems, so you are always ready to respond to any eventualities that may occur in the complex and challenging maritime domain.

OUR OFFICERS IN THEIR WORDS

COLONEL (COL) CHNG KIM CHUAN

Commander Third Flotilla

I was first introduced to the Navy during my Basic Military Training (BMT), and was drawn to the amazing opportunities that the career had to offer. The prospect to see the world through overseas missions and exercises, and the opportunity to advance my education with a fully paid scholarship stirred the interest of the then bright-eyed recruit. More than 20 years on, I am happy to say that I have not regretted my decision to join the Navy.

The Navy has given me the opportunity to grow as a leader. I have commanded a patrol vessel, a landing ship tank, a squadron and now a flotilla comprising the landing ships tank and fast craft utility (FCUs). These are leadership experiences that are unrivalled because taking command entails a wide spectrum of skills that I have to learn, from handling manpower matters, logistics, engineering to what I hold closest to my heart - inspiring the men and women under my charge. It has been a privilege to work alongside them and to make a difference in their lives.

In my career, I have participated in many exciting missions overseas, such as one of the first overseas peace support operations that the Navy had undertaken — the mission to East Timor in 1999. The Singapore Armed Forces (SAF), in support of the United Nations peacekeeping mission in Timor-Leste, contributed over 1000 personnel and our ships played an important role in the international effort to restore peace and security to Timor-Leste. The mission showed me what it meant to serve in the military — to bring peace in times of chaos.

Over the years, I have taken on different appointments which have exposed me to the varied roles that the Navy plays in our larger defence ecosystem. A career in the Navy is meaningful because the role we play has a direct impact on Singapore's survival and prosperity as a small nation. If your heart tells you that this is something you hope to contribute to, we look forward to welcoming you on board.

LIEUTENANT COLONEL (LTC) XAVIER LOW JIUN WEE

Commanding Officer, RSS Conqueror
(Challenger-class submarine)

As a teenager, I was clear that I wanted a career in the public sector. Choosing between being a teacher, a policeman, a pilot or a Naval Officer, what eventually attracted me to the Navy was the prospect of an exciting career that would bring me beyond horizons. Coming from a humble background, I was grateful to be awarded the SAF Academic Scholarship which provided for my university education, alleviating the financial burden on my family.

My career in the Navy has been nothing short of amazing. I have served on board the patrol vessels and mine-counter measure vessels during my junior days where I saw for myself what it meant to serve at the frontline of our maritime defence. One of my biggest milestones in the Navy came when I had the privilege to join the submarine community. I spent five years in Sweden to train with our then newly acquired Archer-class submarines, pursued an MBA and started my family with the arrival of my eldest daughter. Choosing to become a submariner required me to take a leap of faith, and I am glad that I did.

The common misconception is that the view from the top is always rosy, but being a Commanding Officer is not all that it seems. Each day, I am confronted with decisions that I have to make, many of which impact the lives of those who are under my care. Ironically, this responsibility comes with immense fulfilment because of the positive difference I can make to the people who have placed their trust in my leadership. I absolutely enjoy engaging, encouraging and motivating my crew. After all, you can't be a leader if no one is willing to follow you.

The Navy has become like a second home to me. Serving alongside the men and women who have committed their lives to defending Singapore has been an honor. I know that they will be the people I can count on during tough times, and you can be very sure that they will be there for you if you decide to join our Navy family.

CAPTAIN (CPT) JAIME LIEW

Staff Officer,
Joint Manpower Plans Department

At the end of Junior College, I knew that I wanted a job that would allow me to work with people in a life-changing way, and one that would challenge me intellectually and engage me emotionally. I saw the chance to do all three in the Navy after attending a scholarship reception where a female Naval Officer shared about how she can trust her life with each and every crew on board her ship. I was sold and spent the next four months convincing my family and friends that I was serious about joining the Navy.

Having received the SAF Merit Scholarship, I went on to pursue a Bachelor of Science in International Relations at the London School of Economics and Political Science (LSE).

Living and studying overseas broadened my mind and exposed me – in a very intimate and immediate fashion – to numerous different cultures, strands of thoughts and identities.

As a Naval Officer, every single day brings fresh challenges, and every one of them requiring a great depth of character to surmount. The reward comes when your crew looks up and smiles at you in a brief demonstration of camaraderie. Your best moment is when they come to you with more problems, because that means you've earned their trust.

My fondest memory is sailing back from an overseas deployment when we had some time for recreation in the middle of an open ocean, where my ship held a "steel beach party". We screened a movie on the flat surface of the hangar doors, barbecued on the flight deck, and blasted music into the evening. It was a rare moment of peace amidst the usually hurtling pace of an operational ship. The horizon was unimpeded by land; the skies were stained red and gold, and some of my closest friends were beside me. I thought that I had never felt so infinite. That experience is something you can only get in the Navy.

WE ARE THE NAVY FAMILY

Beyond the various operations and exercises that the RSN undertakes, what makes the RSN so special is its closely-knit Navy Family spirit. Working and living together on board a unique environment like our ships forges a sense of camaraderie and allows for lasting ties of kinship to be built amongst the crew, across the ranks.

Set sail on a journey with us and be part of our Navy Family.
