OUR PURPOSE

For centuries, maritime trade has been a key component of Singapore's economy and vital to its survival and prosperity. Given Singapore's strategic location, seaborne trade is the lifeblood of our economy and we rely on the sea to import valuable cargo and energy, and to export goods we manufacture. Our port is one of the busiest in the world and our offshore islands along the Singapore Strait host some of the world's largest oil refineries. Threats to Singapore's waters – the borders of a small island state measuring no more than 50km by 27km with no geographic depth – are also threats to the nation and livelihood of Singaporeans. The sea is Singapore's lifeline, our link to the world and our first line of defence.

The 4 key roles of our Navy

Ensuring maritime security

The Singapore Strait is one of the busiest waterways in the world – every day, close to a thousand ships ply it. Given its proximity to the country's city centre and critical industries, it is crucial that the RSN ensures that maritime security is never compromised. The Navy maintains a 24/7 presence in Singapore waters, supported by surveillance and sense-making hubs ashore, and works closely with national and regional maritime agencies and navies to ensure that our seas are safe and secure for all.

Enhancing diplomacy

The RSN contributes to the expansion of Singapore's policy space by making friends and sustaining strong relationships with fellow navies in the region and beyond. Building relationships with friends and partners improves trust and interoperability and makes it easier to tackle maritime concerns and security challenges together.

Protecting our Sea Lines of Communication

Singapore sits astride the major sea lines of communication in the world. Cut off its access to them and Singapore will immediately be isolated. The RSN plays an important role in maintaining access to these sea lines of communication and deterring and dealing with threats to their closure.

Securing our peace

In peace, the RSN has to hone and finesse its warfighting capabilities. It has to be ready at all times to answer the call of duty, and work with friends and partners to protect the seas, which are global commons. Should deterrence and diplomacy fail, the RSN will secure a swift and decisive victory for Singapore against any aggressor at sea.

AN ELITE FORCE FOR MISSION SUCCESS

Upon completion of your training as a Naval Diver, you will join one of the following specialised groups:

Special Warfare Group

Our Naval divers in the Special Warfare Group are elite soldiers, trained to operate at sea, land and air. Armed with advanced weaponry and supported by a professionally trained team, their expertise in conducting highly complex operations act as a force multiplier for our Navy.

Clearance Diving Group

Preserving the safety of our vital sea lanes are our Naval Divers from the Clearance Diving Group. As part of the Naval Explosive Ordnance Disposal Unit, our divers work closely with mine-countermeasure platforms to conduct hull checks, as well as clear mines and war relics. Divers are also an integral part of the Accompanying Sea Security Teams, boarding and searching ships that carry highly sensitive materials through our waters.

Underwater Demolition Group

Our Naval Divers in the Underwater Demolition Group combine their mastery in combat diving skills with their expertise in underwater demolition to preserve the safety of Singapore's vital sea lanes.

OUR DIVERS IN THEIR WORDS

CWO ONG SIANG THAI

Commanding Officer, Frogman School, Naval Diving Unit

Growing up, I have always loved water sports such as swimming and snorkeling. Little did I know that my love for the water would lead me to a life-long career as a Naval Diver. What drew me to a career with the Naval Divers was the sense of great honour and prestige to be part of this elite group.

I became the first Chief Warrant Officer to assume a Commanding Officer appointment in the RSN. This would not have been possible without the development opportunities provided by the RSN and the excellent leaders who have groomed me to be the person I am today.

As the Commanding Officer of Frogman School, I ensure the highest level of training standards of all young servicemen who join us as Naval Divers. This is important because we have a crucial mission of ensuring that Singapore's territorial waters are secured. We train hard so that we are able to react to any mission tasked to us.

One of the most memorable missions I participated in was the search operation during the 1997 SilkAir crash. I recall fighting against rough tides and murky waters and at the same time, I saw true selflessness amongst my peers who worked tirelessly throughout the challenging operation. It inspired me to give my best, and reminded me why I chose to serve.

I would say, being in the Navy has brought out the best in me. Just commit yourself and it will bring out the best in you too.

3WO XU XIUDE

Senior Diver, Naval Diving Unit

Diving has always been my passion. I was particularly intrigued by the complexity of military grade diving equipment and maritime special operations, and decided to take the leap of faith as a Naval Diver. When you do something you love, work never feels like work.

As a Senior Diver, I am responsible for the performance and motivation of the junior divers under my care. For me, it's not just about identifying the strengths of each individual member, but seeing how each member can play on one another's strength to function as a strong unit.

My unit provides maritime special operation solutions to the Navy, by conducting search, locate and recovery of underwater mines. I have been involved in a few high key national events such as the DPRK-US Singapore Summit, National Day Parade and Formula One race, where we conducted underwater security screenings to ensure there were no suspicious explosive devices. Essentially, we ensure Singapore's safety and security.

I truly believe that there is no other career that enriches your life as much as serving as a Naval Diver. There will be tough times, but tough times don't last, tough men do.

SSG TAN HONG YU ALVIN

Communications Specialist, Naval Diving Unit

I began my journey in the Navy as a Communications Expert on board the Missile Corvette, before taking the plunge to become a Naval Diver. I've always liked challenges, and since joining Naval Diving Unit (NDU), every day has been an adventure.

My most recent adventure was attending the US Ranger Course. As part of the course, I executed missions high in the mountains, accomplished waterborne operations and survived out in the deserts. It was indeed a challenging two-month course that tested my physical stamina, mental strength, leadership skills and tactical fundamentals. However, I thoroughly relished this experience of training with the best and fittest soldiers from around the world.

Being a Naval Diver, most of the tasks are physically demanding, but I always managed to pull through with the support of my superiors and peers. I have found my best friends in the Navy, people whom I can trust with my life.

At the heart of serving as a Naval Diver, it is important to remember the role of being in the RSN. The RSN is charged with the important mission of defending Singapore's waters and we cannot afford to fail. Be prepared for challenges that will come your way, and you'll find out what you are really made of.

WE ARE THE NAVY FAMILY

Beyond the various operations and exercises that the RSN undertakes, what makes the RSN so special is its closely-knit Navy Family spirit.

Through exciting missions, we grow as individuals and as a unit; working together to defend our maritime nation.

Rise through strength and be part of our Navy Family.
